BFA (ARTF) students who do not meet the above criteria and BA (ATLA) students considering the BFA major may also request a portfolio review by emailing the department chair early in spring semester.

At the completion of the BFA Review, students will select their studio art concentration. While it may subsequently change, the concentration must be finalized no later than the beginning of the final year in the BFA Program.

Review Process:

BFA Review eligible ARTF majors will receive an email with a link to a Box folder, into which students will upload their Portfolio Review Application materials by a deadline in the fourth or fifth week of classes/early February. Portfolio review teams will then contact students to set up a time for the review. Portfolio reviews typically occur in the spring semester, and during the sophomore year of study.

Reviews will be 30-45 minutes in length and conducted by a pair of faculty members. During the review, students will briefly present a digital portfolio and summarize their Statement of Academic and Career Goals. Faculty will provide an oral evaluation of the student and advise and answer questions regarding progress in the program. A written evaluation will then be placed in the student's file, and the BFA Review marked as complete in CourseLeaf.

Portfolio Review for BFA in Studio Arts Application Instructions

Note: all files will be uploaded into the Box folder link provided in the email calling for BFA Review submissions. Files must be labeled with the student's last name and specify what the file contains: i.e., Smith_BFAReviewImages; Smith_Transcript; Smith_BFAReviewStatement

Application Materials:

1. One portfolio of 10 images, the file labeled with the student's name and contents (see above):
